Maize Imports Down 26 Percent on Restricted Shipments from Tanzania and Uganda

Maize imports to Kenya declined 26 percent in the first seven months of 2021, due in part to restrictions on produce coming in from Tanzania and Uganda. The Ministry of Agriculture says the volume declined to 2.24 million bags in the review period from 3.04 million bags in the first seven months of last year. Kenya had banned imports of maize in April from Uganda and Tanzania based on concerns of the high levels of aflatoxin, which the authorities said exceeded the required 10 parts per billion as required under the country's jurisdiction.

Court Strikes Out Kidero's Sh58 Million Graft Charge

The anti-corruption court has struck out one of the graft charges facing former Nairobi Governor Evans Kidero after finding there were insufficient details of the alleged crime. Chief magistrate Douglas Ogoti said the charge, in which Dr Kidero and Nyakach MP Aduma Owour are accused of conspiring to defraud the Nairobi County Government of Sh58 million, lacks clarity in violation of the Constitution and criminal procedure code. Mr. Aduma was previously acting director of legal affairs at the defunct City Council. While upholding an objection raised by the duo, the magistrate stated that a charge must clearly bring out the wrongful deed that comprises the physical components of a crime.

What Shape will U.S.-Africa Trade Policy Take After AGOA Ends in 2025?

With the African Growth and Opportunity Act expiring in 2025, what are the prospects for a revised African trade initiative? According to long-time Congressional staffer Tom Sheehy, "the policy path is less clear than when AGOA became law, and the prospects for a substantial African trade initiative gaining political support are more challenging." "Competition with China could help drive an Africa trade agenda, but supporters must first figure out the policy," says Sheehy, who was a key participant in the African trade policy deliberations as staff director of the House Foreign Affairs Committee for six years.
